BIG BREAKFAST BANQUET

Somnolent Sophomores Smitten by News of Freshman Feast, Held in Syracuse.

If you had been awake and watchful in the very early morning of Thursday, the 26th of January, you might have been able to discern the dim outlines of dark figures moving stealthily about the Campus. From out of the darkness you might also have heard an occasional footfall and a strained whisper. Soon, however, these sounds died away in the direction of Clinton and all was again silent. But if you are not a Freshman you were not awake. For, with this exception, the whole college slept on, and most soundly of all the class of 1913. Little did the Sophomores dream what the cruel light of dawn would reveal to them.

The Freshman class complete to a man left Clinton on a special car at 5:30 a. m., changed cars at the West Shore tracks and journeyed to Syracuse, unimpeded. After their arrival they made their presence known until 11:30, when they sat at meat in the Hotel Jefferson with President Robinson presiding as toastmaster. This is what they ate and drank:

Grape fruit Maraschino cherries
Chicken consomme in cups
Filet of sole Tartar sauce
Creamed potatoes
Tenderloin steak
With French mushrooms in sherry
Parisienne potatoes
Asparagus tips on toast
Champagne punch
Chicken salad en mayonaise
Lettuce sandwiches
Camembert cheese Toasted wafers
Demi Tasse

After the appetite had been sufficiently satiated to permit speech, Callahan, '14, in a very inspiring little talk proposed "The Class." McMillan came next with a humorous something about Ministers' Sons. At this point and contrary to the program, "Ben" Greengard spoke at some length in extolling freshman virtues and sophomore vices. Ben made such a hit that he desired to make all of the remaining speeches, but was finally prevailed upon to yield to Akers who told his impressions of the "Faculty" in a convincing manner and Gates in his toast, "Skirts," showed a broad and keen knowledge of his subject. Then Braman, president of the Freshman Class of Syracuse University, welcomed the Hamilton boys to the city in a very clever and pretty speech which was heartily applauded. McGowan told of the gallant deeds of '14 in athletics and Barnes said everything that hadn't already been expressed concerning the "Sophs." Ogden gave Wine, Women, and Song delightfully. Connell, '12 and Peck, '12, told how glad they were to be there and highly complimented their hosts. Then after Marsh had toasted "Alma Mater" in an earnest manner, the strains of "Carrissima"sounded thruout the room, and the freshmen banquet of the class of '14 became history. The theatre in the afternoon, a basket ball game in the evening, served, among other attractions, to beguile the fleeting hours until the car left at 11:30 p. m. The class arrived on the hill in time to find sufficient bed clothing to cover their needs temporarily altho many members slept on the floor. Having expressed themselves as having had the best time ever, the Freshmen dispersed, with Rip, Ri, Ro, Reen, Hamilton, Hamilton, Fourteen, ringing clear in the morning air. The committee which planned the banquet, and accomplished the successful getaway was as follows: Calder, chairman, Booth, Felt, Dayton, Frazine, Eddy, Lyon, and Leavenworth.

JUNIOR WHIST CLUB.

The Junior delegations of Delta Kappa Epsilon and Sigma Phi entertained the Junior Whist Club at the "Deke" House last Thursday evening. Progressive bridge whist was played, after which refreshments were served. About forty members were present. Professor Lewis was a guest of the Club.

SIMPLY SENTIMENTALITY

"Phil" Welch, '09, Speaking Ex-Cathedra, Thus Characterizes the January "Lit."

To the Editor of Life, Sir:

"O! A gracious day! O! Gracious! How sweet the music is! How soft the wind plays!" We have it from Dr. Wood in his charming little Far Journey that the athletic meet hourly had some such editorial comment to make concerning the opening of the contest. The celestial sentiments are mine concerning the January Lit.

Sid. Sherwin's letter rings sincere thruout, mainly because we know Sid. so well. But it needed an issue with more backbone to affect the proper balance. Inspired by the vigor of modern thought we kick against the traces of sentimental religions and perhaps imagine ourselves Agnostics. The attitude tho blameworthy is not entirely our fault. It is induced by a nauseating reiteration of admitted truths concerning holy things which must inevitably sicken for their very triteness, like a classic song at the mercy of the organ-grinder. It is the fault of the singer that we turn away, not the fault of the song.

Intramural dissentions were almost better than a harmony based on sentimentality. But I fear I preach, pulpitless.

To my mind, Wisehart's "Hills of Death"—I can see him now successfully ruining it in the presentation—is the one contribution to the number which stands out clear-cut and well-defined as a thing of value. No theme could be more sentimental than that chosen by the worthy editor of Lit., yet the delicacy of his touch saves it. Wisehart seems to be mastering that conservatism of art which is absolutely essential to the treatment of such themes.

The thinking behind the editorials is good, the pieces themselves a little too long. Editorials are directed to and at the average reader; this fact does not prevent them from being executed with consummate art,

IN MEMORIAM.

From the legal atmosphere of Lawyer Martin's office, the report is abroad that Merz, the beloved and obliging steward of Commons Hall, is to resign, to depart, to leave those walls so familiar to his eagle eye, so endeared to him by a thousand associations, to see no more those tiled floors, rendered almost sacred to him by reason of "Pete" Marhaver's tripping procession and an occasional cigarrette butt from "Bill" Kultchar's biology-stained fingers. It is with sadness that we record the passing of that modern culinary Croesus.

It was reported Sunday evening that Merz had purchased property situated between Dr. Squires' domicile and Prof. Brown's, chiefly because of the compatibility of the three parties. This rumor was substantiated last evening by "Malfeasance" Gould, who, broken-hearted and almost frantic with grief, was found by a Life reporter, sulking around Floyd King's box-office.

Why Merz is leaving will probably remain a problem. Always obliging and efficient and possessing withal the most winning personality, an optimist and a philanthropist, never morbidly sordid, he ever won his way into the hearts of his patrons. His sudden resignation comes as a great blow to "Stan" Jones and "Squirt" Fawcett, who by a regular nocturnal "bread without" and "eggs on" brought Merz out of the depths of poverty into wealth and contentment.

Sleuth "Johnny" Weaver believes that there are only two solutions of the mystery: Either Our Frank will settle down to a life of ease in his new home, where the fellows will be as welcome as of yore, or else he will assume the political duties which, it is asserted, Governor Dix has almost forced upon Dr. Stryker.

EDITORIAL.

Now that both the Sophomores and the Freshmen have been duly fed and the underclassmen banquets for the current year are over and resulted in no fatalities, the College gives a sigh of relief and fervently hopes for peace and quiet among the ranks of the younger members of our family until Spring Term when it is expected, as a matter of course, that they will devote their entire attention to the important business of drowning each other in the turbid waters of the fountain.

The Sophomores held their banquet in Little Falls on the night preceding the opening of the term and those of the Freshmen who were on the Hill busily engaged themselves in upsetting as many Sophomore rooms as their time and strength would permit.

Last Thursday the Freshmen succeeded in eluding their opponents and stole away early in the morning for their banquet which was held in Syracuse. The Sophomores, instead of following, decided upon a surer policy, the example having been set them by the Freshmen, and resorted to "room stacking" tactics. And they did not confine themselvess to merely "stacking" the rooms, but littered the Campus with Freshmen belongings.

By ten o'clock, when the upperclassmen recitations for the first hour were over, the work was pretty well advanced. Beds and other Freshman furniture decorated the trees in the quadrangle and the tank in the gymnasium was comfortably filled with Freshman bedclothes. Mattresses were tumbled out of the windows and lay on the ground in the rain. Some furniture was broken and considerable damage done.

By means of upperclassmen "persuasion" most of the stuff was returned. It may be argued that both classes were carried too far by class enthusiasm and that both were equally at fault. It is not our purpose to argue that point.

The injustice of the whole affair is evident. We are well aware of the fact that there are many men in College only as a result of great sacrifice on the part of fathers and mothers. That their property—furniture or clothing—should be injured or destroyed in their absence, whether by Freshmen or Sophomores—or anybody else—shows, at least, a decided lack of courtesy, sportsmanship and fair play. It may not harm the man himself because he may not be the one who pays the bills, but it may mean a greater effort and sacrifice on the part of the parents who are sending him.

A row is always a good way of settling disputes and altogether more satisfactory, but this idea of hitting a man in the dark, of destroying his property while he is away, is decidedly beneath the standard of honor of Hamilton College men.

It is to the credit of the upperclassmen that they realized the injustice of such performances and at a meeting held in the Chapel Thursday afternoon decided that all forms of "room stacking" should be eliminated from underclassmen activities.

During the past week a change has been effected in our system of choosing intercollegiate debaters which will no doubt, work to the ultimate advantage of our debating teams. For a long time there has been felt a need of some form of Debating Council and a more open competition for places on the teams to represent the College.

Largely thru the instrumentality of Professor Lewis these changes have been brought about. It must be remembered that the new system has nothing to do with the regular departmental work, but concerns itself only with selecting and preparing intercollegiate debaters. Only a few years ago none but Seniors were eligible to compete for places and to represent the debating strength of the College. Then it was thought best to open the field to the Juniors, and the team was finally chosen from the upperclassmen who were on the Interclass Debate.

The new plan opens competition to all classes, and a Freshman has equal opportunity with a Senior, provided he shows equal ability. The advantages of this plan are at once evident. Many men have had considerable training in debate before they enter college, and, if given a chance, might quickly adapt themselves to our methods and make an older man work hard to keep his position on the team.

There is as much need for competition in debate as there is in athletics. We would not think of making up our football or baseball teams from any one class. Furthermore we pay the utmost attention to the development of "scrub material" for future teams. It is just this system that will be applied to our debating teams under the new plan, and it cannot help bringing good results.

On Saturday, after the Interclass Debate, a position on the Intercollegiate Debate Team will be open for any man in College who can prove himself capable of filling it. The Debating Council in charge of the tryouts and the coaching of the team includes Professor Lewis, Dr. Wood, Dr. Squires, Dr. Davenport, and Dr. Shearer.

—The "All Collegiate" Basket-ball team of Clinton defeated the "Reserves," a team of Hamilton men, last Thursday evening by a score of 45 to 28. Lacking practice the work of the Reserves was ragged. Scoones, Risley, Cheney, Regin and Moore played for Clinton and Getman, '11, Knox, C. Root, D. Root, '12, Wheelock and Woods, '13, represented the Reserves.

—John Clark, ex-'07, was on the Hill last week.

SIMPLY SENTIMENTALITY.

but the art should be employed to the end that they set out to accomplish. The art of a lot of thought in a few words is the art that reaches that Freshman over there eating his breakfast as we are instead of attending chapel.

As for the "Confessions of a Stock Actress" I shall really have to raise my hand in protest. I shall not tincture my remarks with any of the praise that damns other than to say that Lyon has a certain graphic something about his style which should be cultivated along other lines. But really Mr. Lyons (your name is spelled two different ways in the issue) I hope you'll pardon my getting personal with you, but if that actress friend of yours has been faithfully depicted she ought to have a conspicuous position over the facade of Notre Dame. Tell her to look out or she may get arrested for masquerading. Robert Rudd, '09, placed the presentation of girl-talk in the Lit. on a level that ought to discourage any of his successors. I must admire your courage in undertaking such a piece, but would ask that as Captain of your Soul you lead it gently but firmly to other fields.

Willard's "Muckraking Madness" is a typical collection of half digested truisms presented in a declamatory style which makes very good material for dueling with the lure of luncheon for the attention of Saturday noon's chapel-loungers who happen to be short of cuts. The writer has accepted rather hastily some generalisms on the subject of muckraking and made a declamation. He has started out to write a speakable piece and has succeeded. That's a fair canon of art complied with, and I congratulate Mr. Willard and hope he got a good mark. I was sorry, however, to see the thing in print, lest some alien take it as representative of Hamilton's thought on such subjects.

Thompson wrote the "Tragedy of Music-Makers" in a sincere mood. I respect the mood. Thompson is a musician, but not as yet a writer. If he wishes to become the latter I have no quarrel with him but he has a bit of road to travel, especially along the way of taste. He could study to his advantage Wisehart's selective methods. I must agree with his self-criticism that "This may be mere sentimentality." There are flashes suggestive of ability.

My meagre knowledge thru the press of the performances of the individuals and the football team itself prevents me from submitting an evaluation of the Football Review, further than to say that it sounds all right. Whoever wrote it knows how to produce smooth, readable prose without poetizing cabbages, which, to be sure, is some accomplishment.

"A Colloquialism" is a typical Hamiltonian lament. It speaks of an idealized attitude toward "athletitis" which would require a ten-year campaign of far more virile invective than that which it employs if the attitude is to be brought about. If a fellow played football for the fun of the game he would quit it when it ceased to be fun for him, but he would be eternally stigmatized as a "quitter" by his companions on the Hill for exercising the very courage of his convictions. In my time at college even a better excuse than mere ennui at the sacrifice required was not sufficient to divert the stigma.

Such is the attitude of the college body and I'm not so sure that it isn't a better attitude than that of the author of "A Colloquialism." I never could share the "for God and for Hamilton" fervor because I invariably felt self-conscious when I uttered such sentiments, but for those who can utter them sincerely I have nothing but admiration. I would ask Hamilton undergraduates to continue with their canons of judgment concerning football men. View the team as the army to represent you in your battles and scorn all of them who are traitors to that army.

It is a rather youthful attitude, to be sure, but, good heavens! you undergraduates are young enough, you're embued with the sacred emotionalism of youth which is a world better than all the wisdom of the stiff-jointed, unfired sages. "We still will be thy boys," is your song while you're there on the Hill and afterward too, and don't you let any old faculty or trustees or graduates do you out of it. Listen to Nelse Drummond or George Sicard and their ilk, and tell the rest to try a little brandy if they think they're getting old.

I notice a bit of verse in the issue; I wonder was Mr. Hull allowed the privilege of poetizing thus by himself as a consolation prize, if so who was the runner up? I never criticise verse, out of deference to my own. I formed this negative habit at the suggestion of Woollcott, who says, "If you like it, that's your business; if you don't, it's surely not mine." I liked Hull's lonely effort fairly well, but that's my business.

I'll pass over the rest of the Lit. without comment lest someone get the idea that I'm writing under a space arrangement. Reading the issue was a pleasant reminder of things neglected and enjoyed which are now out of reach. It's the first time I ever read an issue all the way thru.

PHILIP H. WELCH, '09.

DEBATE COUNCIL ORGANIZED.

The Interclass and Intercollegiate debating teams of the College are now under the supervision of a Faculty Debate Council composed of Dr. Squires, Dr. Wood, Dr. Davenport, Prof. Shearer, and Prof. Lewis.

The Interclass debaters met the council Tuesday, but no definite plans were agreed upon. An open competition for positions on the Intercollegiate team will be held shortly after the Interclass Debate, which will be held February 3rd. Any man in any class is eligible to compete for the Intercollegiate team, whether he has been on the Interclass team or not. The date for this trial will be announced shortly.

The opening concert of the season was held last evening in the Scollard Opera House under the management of Floyd King. The inclemency of the weather undoubtedly prevented many from attending, but the audience was duly appreciative of the efforts of the Clubs. A memorial tablet will be placed in the library and a book plate will be designed for the collection.
